Subscribers to "The Times" will enter a favor by promptly reporting any discounting of collectors or neglect of duty on the part of carriers. Complaints either by mail or in person will receive prompt attention. The Morning Edition should be delivered to all parts of the city by 6:30 a. m., including Sunday. The Evening Edition should be in the hands of subscribers not later than 6:30 p. m.

Rejected manuscripts are usually returned when accompanied by stamps, but any obligation to do so is expressly disavowed. Manuscripts unaccompanied by postage will not be returned.

THE TIMES STILL GAINING.

Figures That Lie—How the Star Represents to the Public.

Saturday's Star announced that its circulation was "many thousands in excess of any other Washington paper and believed to be fully five times that of any afternoon contemporary." This falsification is easy to expose.

The daily average circulation of The Times for the six days on which the Star bases its calculation was 33,367; that of the Star was 28,650. For the sake of the argument, let us admit that the Star has five times the circulation of our evening edition. One-fifth the circulation of the Star is 5,730. Subtract that amount from 33,367, the average of The Times, and 27,637 is left to represent the circulation of our morning edition.

Compare that amount with the 28,650 which the Star falsely claims, is "many thousands in excess of any other Washington paper," and you will see that its figures lie.

The aggregate circulation of the Star last week was 171,901. That of The Times was 223,776. The Star gained 1,424 in circulation during the week and The Times added 7,751 to its list.

These figures should be satisfactory proof as to which is the most popular newspaper, and should also demonstrate to advertisers where they can obtain best results.

The Times is in the lead and will stay there, because it is the best daily in Washington.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM.

In view of the approaching session of Congress and the natural influx of visitors to Washington the attempt to create a typhoid scare to promote private interests should meet emphatic disapproval. Leading physicians say the disease is little if any worse this year than usual, and that there is absolutely no ground for alarm or cause to send out sensational information. It is the season when typhoid is more or less prevalent, and it is shameful to practice upon the fears of a community to further personal aims. Instead of listening to the tales of interested persons the public should quietly await events. Should typhoid threaten serious results there will be time enough to check it before any great harm can be done.

Let it be remembered that imperfect sewerage is not the prime cause of typhoid, and if Washington were infinitely worse off in that respect than it is there would be no cause for the present outcry. Good sanitary conditions are necessary to health, and while these conditions in Washington might be greatly improved, we are not in danger of an epidemic. When Congress meets an effort will be made to pass an other bond bill for the improvement of our streets and sewers, and any reasonable effort in that direction should meet public approval. But an issue of bonds of which at least half would be sold to improve suburban property will naturally be discontinued and its promoters denounced.

The District bond bill was defeated in the last Congress because it included a scheme to promote private interests, and next time the attempt is made the use to which the money is to be put should be clearly stated, and that can only be done by incorporating in the measure the particular improvements to be made, together with each specific locality. When this is done a bond bill for necessary improvements will pass Congress.

THE TRAFFIC TRUST.

The big traffic trust, which includes all the important railroad systems in the country, completed its organization in New York yesterday, and as soon as the agreement can be ratified by the boards of directors of the different railroad organizations it will immediately go into effect.

against trusts, or every industry and traffic-carrying system in the country will be under their control. As it is, they dominate prices and prevent the successful independent activities of business enterprises, and it is time their insidious influence was stopped.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS.
The excise board is evidently doing right in having the city mapped out and marked with the name and location of each saloon, so that every square will show how many houses are selling liquor. In making up its map the board should not forget to designate the eighty-one saloons in the Division, where liquor is sold night and day, including Sunday, and it might also be well to annotate on the margin of the map that $32,400 is lost to the District revenues, through failure to compel these speak-easies to take out a license.

Laying aside the moral question involved, in this discrimination the excise board is doing an injustice to those who pay a license fee for selling liquor, and who submit to regulations which require them to close their places of business on stated days and during certain hours. There are 775 places in Washington where liquor is sold under license, and it is not right that eighty-one unlicensed speak-easies should be permitted to sell in competition, to the detriment of the trade of the law-abiding saloon-keepers. That is the business side of the question. The moral side is very much more in evidence.

The sale of liquor is regulated by law to prevent its use by irresponsible persons and to lessen the injury done society by its insidious effects. It has always been looked upon as a promoter of crime and disease, but so strong is its hold on the human family that its abolition is at present an impossibility. For that reason we have a license system that places its sale in the hands of reputable persons in all well-regulated communities. The eighty-one speak-easies now selling liquor in the Division are neither reputable nor responsible. Their inmates are social parasites and outcasts, and to allow them to sell strong drink under any conditions is contrary to the best interests of the public.

A GOVERNMENT SOLO.

In reply to a letter of inquiry concerning the organization of a military company in the United States for service in Cuba, Attorney General Harmon not only answers that it would be a direct violation of the neutrality laws, but he also volunteers a little advice that will not entitle him to public thanks.

He says: "While there is no law to prevent American citizens from speaking their sentiments on any subject, singly or together, taking such action as you mention in your letter would, in my judgment, be discourteous in the highest degree to a friendly power and tend to embarrass and obstruct the Government in carrying out its determination to faithfully execute the laws and fulfill its treaty obligations."

The Attorney General should remember that Spain was not so careful of our feelings at the time of the rebellion when she recognized the Confederates as belligerents, almost before the echoes of the first battle had died away. There was then no sham loyalty to treaty obligations, nor mock sympathy for the troubles of a friendly power. The action of Spain at that time caused the United States thousands of lives and millions of treasure in the years by which it prolonged the war, and the argument that we must now close our mouths and smother our sympathies for a band of patriots to please Spain is rubbing in the loyalty-to-treaty-obligations a little too deep for common comfort.

With all due respect to Attorney General Harmon the public would like to know by what authority he sets himself up as a government solon. His advice should be confined to legal questions, and not made a general, especially when unsolicited. If he is anxious to set on record as the administration mouthpiece, let him publish a reason why trusts are not prosecuted, and whether or not the anti-trust law is still in force. This information would be interesting and would furnish a cause for realizing that we really have an Attorney General.

JOHN BULL'S VILLS OF WRATH.

The much talked of developments which were to throw new light on the international yacht race have been published in England, and instead of being a reasonable explanation of the Valkyrie's failure to meet expectations they are nothing more than a second edition of the Sackville trade against America, so far as nonsensical twaddle and unnecessary abuse are concerned. Such a casting up of the British bile will never attract sympathy nor increase respect for English sportsmanship. The Valkyrie is the poorer boat and her owner failed to complete the series of races because his heart was too weak to stand the beating, and no amount of vituperation will ever cause the public to look at his withdrawal from the race in any other way.

England's boasted supremacy is gradually being narrowed down to an exceptionally well developed ability to scold, and an inordinate desire to bulldoze inferior nations. Her hold upon the markets has been lessened to a great extent by the enterprise and energy of the United States and Germany, and as a manufacturing nation she has dropped from first place. In finance her strength is rapidly waning, and ten years hence America will be headquarters for most of her principal money lenders. As time elapses those of her provinces that are prosperous will establish governments of their own and Englishmen can then sit in their tight little island and boast of former glory.

Perhaps the mental picture of this inevitable future has soured the English mind and made it cranky and touchy, as the great future of this country looms up in comparison. If that is true and scolding has become chronic with Englishmen we can well afford to overlook such a mental weakness. Therefore, empty your vials of wrath, Sir John Bull—empty 'em.

REMOVAL OF ASHES.

Dr. Woodward has made many excellent suggestions and instituted many admirable reforms relating to the sanitation of the city, but none deserves more cordial endorsement than his proposition that the removal of ashes from residences should be carried on, like the removal of garbage, by the health authorities, and not left to the discretion of the respective householders.

At present ashes are taken away as the convenience or judgment of the housekeeper dictates, and cases are not infrequently where they have been allowed to accumulate in back yards for an entire winter.

It is obvious that such a condition of things must be objectionable, for, as Dr. Woodward remarks, while clean ashes may not constitute a nuisance injurious to health, there is generally associated with their deposit in this way the accumulation of refuse matter which, to say the least, is unclean, and for that, if no more weighty reason should be differently disposed of. It is quite proper, therefore, that the removal of ashes, instead of being left to private convenience, should be performed by the public scavenger.

With a view to a sanitary reform of this character Dr. Woodward has asked for an appropriation for two crematories for the destruction of refuse other than that gathered by the garbage collector. He admits that this will involve considerable expense and constitute an additional charge upon the taxpayer, but the actual outlay for each household would scarcely be more than he now has to incur for the removal of ashes by "de ole ash man." The chief argument, however, in favor of Dr. Woodward's proposition is that it tends in the direction of more perfect sanitation of the city, and that overbalances all other considerations.

The health officer puts the whole case in a nutshell when he says: "The most important items to the maintenance of the health of the community are pure air, pure water, soil free from pollution, and a pure food supply, and the purity and cleanliness of these depend largely upon the prompt and proper removal of all kinds of refuse matter."

It is expected that Sir Excess, Crocker's new horse, will run off his master's surplus.

"The Powers to Turkey."—"Porte your helm and stop chasing the Armenians."

It will take nine cars to haul the lumber of the Dallas amphitheater to Hot Springs, and possibly all the engines in the country could not draw Corbett and Fitzsimmons there at the same time.

The face of the cuckoo clock at the White House will resemble its wonted smile next week. The cuckoo sentry-box will hold a house-warming, and Secretary Thurber will begin to repeat "Sorry I can't accommodate you, but the President is very busy."

The Allison boom evidently feeds more at home in Iowa than anywhere else, judging from its timidity about crossing the State line.

Bagville or Sackville, it's just the same. He is equally funny by either name.

Gen. Alger's announcement that he will be a candidate for the Presidential nomination can now be classified among the quadrennial bores.

Tom Reed's boom seems to depend entirely upon Maine strength for its support.

That velvet paw of the tiger will now pull the Sunday beer out of the excise fire.

The Chicago Dentist.

A citizen with a swollen jaw was hastening along one of the principal streets of the city, when a sign in front of a tall building caught his attention. It was as follows:

PAISLESS EXTRACTION OF TEETH FREE.

He stopped long enough to note the number of the floor on which the business indicated by the sign was transacted, and then hurried inside and made his way to the dental parlor.

"Is this the place where you pull teeth without pain free?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir," said one of the painless extractors on duty.

"Well, I've got a grinder that's been giving me a good deal of trouble. I wish you'd yank it out."

The sufferer took his place in the chair and opened his mouth. The operator, after applying to the swollen gum a pungent lotion of some sort, speedily relieved him of the offending molar.

"Thanks," said the caller, climbing down and picking up his hat.

"That will be 50 cents," remarked the dentist.

"Fifty cents?" echoed the other. "I thought it was free. That's what you told me a minute ago, and it's what you say on your sign."

"Just so. Did it hurt you any?"

"Yes, it hurt a little."

"That's right. We do our painless extracting free, exactly as we claim. When it hurts we charge you. Fifty cents, please."

Hard on the Widow.

The following conversation is reported to have taken place between a minister and a widow. The widow, who was a widow, was called upon by the minister, seemed desirous of relieving her mind of something which oppressed her, at which the reverend gentleman, wishing to hurry matters, exclaimed:

"My good woman, you see I can be of no service to you until you tell me what it is that troubles you."

"Well, sir, I'm thinking of getting married again."

"Oh, that is it! Let me see; that is pretty frequent, surely. How many husbands have you had?"

"Well, sir," she replied in a tone less of sorrow than of bitterness, "I was married four times. I'm sure there never was a woman so completely tormented as I've been by a set of deceits men as I've been."—Tit-Bits.

Didn't Come In.

His father (suddenly)—Young man, do you play poker?

Her young man (nervously)—Yes, that is so, sir.

His father (regretfully)—I am sorry. Some of us were going to have a little money to-night, and we had hoped you would come to take a hand.—Somerville Journal.

CAME LIKE THE PRODIGAL.

William Deloe, Weak and Emaciated, Depressed His Parents.

William D. Debo, a well-known Washingtonian, who disappeared so mysteriously from Dubois, Pa., a week ago last Saturday, was seen yesterday in the city. He was seen at 803 1/2 street northeast, about 10 o'clock Thursday night, weak, dejected and almost unrecognizable. He had been wandering and suffering. For days past the parents had almost given up hope of ever seeing him again. He had been up to his appearance absolutely nothing but a skeleton. His mother, Mrs. Debo, who was sitting in the parlor, writing a letter to the mother of Debo, suddenly the door opened and looking up quickly the father saw the emaciated form of his son standing in the doorway and heard him say: "Father, I am here."

Gaslight exhibit of the $15,000 painting to-night. You're invited, cordially.

Here's What We Call a Bargain.

LASCELLES GOES TO BERLIN

Former Secretary of Legation at Washington Succeeds Malet.

His Reputation is that of a Diplomat of Wonderful Tact, and He Has Had Remarkable Experiences.

No more fortunate selection could have been made of a successor to Sir Edward Malet at Berlin than Sir Frank Lascelles. In fact, his appointment may be described as an ideal one. He has none of that intense nervousness and restlessness which Sir Edward kept under control only with the utmost effort and difficulty and which somehow of other seemed to communicate itself unconsciously to those who were brought into contact with him.

He is a considerably taller man and bigger in every way, of what may be described as the ideal type. He is a man of great calmness and quietude and who is to be hoped he may communicate to those who are now accredited. Certainly, if there is any person in the world capable of soothing and calming the nerves of a nervous man, it is Sir Frank Lascelles, whose very dignity and quietude and by rendering a noisy, bustling, pushing man thoroughly ashamed of himself.

Sir Frank was secretary of legation at Washington during the tenure of Sir Edward Malet. Since then his career has been both brilliant and rapid. He is the most attractive man of the diplomatic service, to that he makes friends wherever he goes, among both men and women, even a widowed lady of the Russian court. His diplomatic rivals have been unable to resist the charm of his open, hearty and genial manner. Yet, with all that, he is very discreet, quick to take action, very decided in so doing, and utterly fearless as to the consequences.

It was he who notified Khedive Ismail of his deposition in 1879, and who, by his tact and diplomacy, accomplished the whole affair without any disturbance or bloodshed; and, again, he was at Sofia when Prince Alexander, of Baden, was kidnapped from his palace at night, hurriedly fled into Russia, and only permitted to return to sign of his application. Since then he has been at Lucharest, Tiberias, and St. Petersburg, where he won golden opinions, although he was called upon to succeed, at a critical moment, the late Sir Robert Morier, a particular favorite of Alexander III. and of the Russian court.

Sir Frank is one of the best natures of his stage, and it is curious that he should succeed at Berlin as a celebrated actor. He is married to the daughter of Sir Joseph Olfre, who, under the name of "Doctor Jenkins," was ridiculed in Alphonse Daudet's novel, "The Nabob."

Deville owes its creation to the joint enterprise of those two bosom friends, the Duke de Morny and the late Sir Joseph Olfre, the latter being the English physician of Napoleon III. who induced Queen Victoria to confer upon him a knighthood.

With regard to Sir Edward Malet's refusal of a peerage the newspapers seem to be under a misapprehension as to the true reason of his having declined this honor. In the first place he has no children to whom it could descend; secondly, he is not particularly affectionate terms with the members of his own family, and lastly, he belongs to a house so ancient and possessed of so much prestige that a mushroom title would merely serve to impair its dignity.

The Malets came over with William the Conqueror, and almost alone among the English family, can trace their descent in unbroken line to a person prior to the days of Edward the Confessor. Sir Edward would therefore gain nothing in the way of prestige by becoming a peer, and it is difficult to conceive any reason that could possibly have induced him to accept one.

Refusals of peerages are far more common in England than most people would be willing to believe. The Queen has repeatedly offered Mr. Gladstone an earldom, and on two separate occasions offers of a peerage were declined by Mr. Walter, the proprietor of the Times, grandfather of the present publisher thereof. Moreover, it was only about three years ago that Lord Leigh (whose eldest son and heir married Miss Beckwith, of New York, now prosecuting her brother in New York for misappropriation of her share in the parental estate) refused the Queen's offer of a promotion to an earldom, declaring that he preferred to be among the first of the barons rather than at the very tail end of the earls.

Indeed, so many have been the refusals of peerages by people who possessed the ancestry and blazon of blood calculated to fit them for a seat in the upper chamber that it looks very much as if the conferring of peerages would henceforth be confined to parvenues such as the Brasseries, the Sterns, the Flowers, etc., etc.

Mr. de Windt, who is about to visit this country on a lecturing tour, previous to exploring the unknown regions of Alaska and crossing on the ice from the northernmost point of that Territory to the continent of Asia, is in spite of his foreign name, an Englishman, and can lay claim to the honor of being brother-in-law to a reigning sovereign, for he is the brother of Lady Brooke, whose husband is the independent ruler or rajah of Sarawak, which occupies the greater portion of the big island of Borneo.
